Sleep Scientists

Sleep scientists find out what happens to people when they don't get enough sleep. They collect information about how much sleep people need. This helps to keep people safe when they are doing important jobs, like doctors, firefighters and police officers.

Sleep scientist use people called "testers" to help study sleep. The testers don't sleep in their homes. They sleep in laboratories, and have special machines attached to them. The scientists watch them sleep all night. The machines give the scientist information about how well the person is sleeping.

Before the testers go to sleep, the scientists have them do a test on a computer. The testers fall asleep at midnight. At 4 o'clock in the morning, they wake up to do another test on the computer. Five hours later, the testers do another test on the computer.

Frida Kahlo was born in Mexico in 1907. Her parents had 4 girls and were very kind and respectful people. She was a friendly, but unhappy child.

At 18, she was in a bad accident. She was riding in a bus that crashed into a tram. She could not walk for a while and had to spend a lot of time in hospital.

Before her death in 1954, she had made more than 140 different paintings. Fifty-five were beautiful paintings of herself.

In the Desert

Last week, we went camping in the desert for a night. We made a big fire. We ate lots of delicious food and talked. After dinner, everyone was tired but I wanted to have fun in the desert. My father said, "It is not safe to go alone, go to sleep."

But I did not sleep. I ran in the sand. I looked for scorpions under rocks, but there were none. So, I looked at the stars in the sky and saw a bright shining star. I heard a bird. Then it was time to go back.

I looked for our tents but could not find them. I could hear strange noises and my legs were tired. I was lost in the desert, so I felt anxious.

Just then, I heard my father calling me. My father said, "You should be more sensible," and gave me a big hug. I learned that I should always listen to his advice.
